Topic Overview:

The 1910s and 1920s was a time of intense change for American women, including social, economic and political advances. Whilst women in major cities like New York embraced the new (and controversial) 'flapper' lifestyle, other groups of women hit back by reviving traditional religious values.

Lesson Sequence:

1. What was life like for women in America in the 1900s? Before we can understand the change that took place in the 1910s and 1920s, we have to examine what life was like for most American women at the turn of the 20th century. Women were without the vote, restricted by social norms and were often underpaid and undereducated compared to their male counterparts.
2. What was the impact of WWI and the vote on American women? The two major events that spurred on change for American women were that of the First World War and the 19th amendment. We look at the impact these two events had.
3. What was the extent of change for American women in the 1910s and 1920s? Although many women did enjoy greater freedom and rights as a result of the 1910s/1920s, many women's lives remained stagnant or, in some cases, social attitudes regressed in anger against the 'urban vices' of the 'flapper' movement.
4. Assessment: Knowledge Test and Q5.
